Cutting-Edge Medical Technology: Computer Assisted Surgery with ENT Fusion Navigation in Department of ENT

BLDE University's Department of ENT is now using a high-tech piece of the state of the art equipment called 3D Computer assisted Navigation system which enables ENT surgeons to operate with incredible precision, reduced risks and complications.(Fig.1,2) This 3-D navigation system makes a big difference for the patient. It will improve overall health care in the region, thanks to this technology.

How Computer Assisted Surgery works? : During computer assisted surgery specialised software creates a virtual 3-D model of patient's head and sinuses, essentially a digital road map for the surgeon to follow. The device is fixed with a 3-D infrared camera which senses accurate placement of instrument and help the surgeon to match the patients' anatomy in a 3-D Model displayed on a monitor much like GPS IN A AUTOMOBILE. (Fig 3). The surgeon is able to track with real time, in relation to patients' true anatomy.

Why Computer Assisted Surgery: Computer assisted surgery (CAS) is taking visualization and surgical accuracy to new heights in the operating room. First utilized in neurosurgical procedures, where precision is of the utmost importance and millimeters matter, CAS technologies are now being utilized in neuro, spine, ENT, orthopaedic, and trauma surgeries. Surgeons may choose to use CAS for many reasons.

Clear visualisation of surgical site is vital aspect of any operative procedure. ENT Fusion navigation system helps ENT surgeon to navigate surgical instruments through complex anatomy of Sinus passages and avoid unintentional damage to delicate structures like eyes, skull base, brain, nerves and vessels. The ability to work in this delicate environment helps to reduce risk of complications and leads to better patient outcomes.

Use of computer assistance is firmly established as a valuable technology in the management of paranasal sinus disease. It may improve the confidence of the surgeon by confirming the position within the challenging anatomic fields. This serves to increase surgical effectiveness and decrease surgical morbidity.

CAS is most helpful in specific anatomic areas, especially in the frontal sinus, the sphenoid and the sphenoethmoid regions, the residual ethmoid partition and disease, in skull base identification, and in orbital dehiscence or orbital surgery for optic nerve or orbital decompression. Many difficult cases are there that cannot be done safely without this technology (for example, in those who have had previous surgery with distorted anatomy or those with bone erosions, and intraorbital or extradural extension. Treatment of anterior skull base tumours like pitutary adenomas, Anterior CSF leaks have become easy and are going on routinely at our Hospital.

Computer assisted surgery is cutting-edge medical technology that offers many benefits to both the surgeon and the patient.

Dr. H.T. Lathadevi, Professor, Department of ENT

Student Writes…

It all goes back to one fine evening in Delhi, when I was sitting on my couch, tensed about my college admissions and my parents constant nagging and fear of failure .But my fortune changed, I got a counseling, call from BLDE university and soon my dream came through. I am going to be a Doctor the thought made me ecstatic and jump in joy. I vividly remember my first day in college. The shining yet elegant white coat worn by so many new faces, the lecture halls, the professors everything seemed so different yet interesting. After the entire desperate wait to coming to college was over, It was like gathering of different people from different state and culture with whom u have to spend your precious five and half years. I met different people with distant interests, immense enthusiasm to learn, to adventure and enjoy the lovely phase of life. So far from home Vijayapur cast a poor impression on me the dirt, the filth of the place got on to my nerves. Barrier of different language worsened my communication to local people and patients. The days passed by I acclimatized to the climate, the people, made awesome mates and soon felt like home again. We students and the teachers become a family together. What mesmerized me the most was the serene , calm and the green sheen of the campus, the cool breeze, the stoned campus standing in contrast .With hectic schedule of long lectures, few interesting, exams, clinical assessments, we hardly got any time to cherish but the co curricular activities made me escape into a space of pleasure, excitement and joy. The annual sports meet, the scintillating cricket matches, football, the joyous crowd made us all happy. The cultural fest being a great platform for talent, hobbies also added significantly to my memorable moments in college. Years flew by, and now I am in my final year when I look back I feel nostalgic. I have developed special attachments to so many professors, seniors, their encouragement, and their affection towards me makes me proud to be student of this college. They gave us the air of comfort, the believe, the zeal to achieve the highest points of our career. I still have to long way to go in my life, these few years will surely stand up to be the best.
