AIIMS

1967 to serve as a national centre for ophthalmic research and treatment. Today, this centre is one of the foremost eye-care institutions in Asia and home to the largest postgraduate programme in Ophthalmology in Asia. AIIMS has also established other similar centres, including for cardiothoracic science, neuroscience, oncology, dental sciences and trauma care. Noted centres include the Dr B.R. Ambedkar Institute-Rotary Cancer Hospital and the Jai Prakash Narayan Apex Trauma Centre.

In 1965, AIIMS also established the Comprehensive Rural Health Services Project at Ballabgarh, Haryana, in collaboration with the state government. Today, the centre has developed into a 50-bed hospital with 24-hour emergency and obstetric facilities. It also serves as a rural training centre for MBBS and PG students.

In 2003, AIIMS also expanded its drug dependence treatment centre into a full-fledged institute at Ghaziabad, which also serves as a training facility continuing assessment process. Hence, there never was a time to take the foot off the accelerator, and the process of education continued unabated without any “down time” for knowledge or skill acquisition. This relentless work ethic got ingrained into our DNA—and I think has helped all of us become good doctors. When there is a sick individual you have to care for, you do not have the luxury of taking your eye off the ball; it is only your enduring commitment and unwavering focus that serve you and your patient well.

Needless to say, we were mentored by some real stars in the medical firmament. Several of our faculty were not only well regarded in the country, but were also internationally renowned, having contributed significantly to medical literature. It is always inspiring to find contributions from your teachers in the medical textbooks you are being taught from. These were people who had, with their exceptional clinical skills, identified problems, evaluated the factors contributing to their evolution and provided therapeutic solutions. In a recent exhibition we organised on the occasion of the
