metabolism, response, and overall therapeutic outcomes. By understanding these biological mechanisms, treatment can be tailored to suit the unique characteristics of each patient.

Dr. Kankanawadi also discussed the paradigm shift in oncology from “organ-based oncology” to “circuit-based oncology.” He explained that traditional cancer treatment often focused primarily on the organ where the tumor originated. However, modern approaches analyze the molecular and signaling circuits that drive cancer growth, enabling clinicians to select targeted therapies based on the underlying biological pathways rather than just the tumor location.

Another important concept highlighted during the lecture was the role of the Precision Cardiologist in primary prevention. Dr. Kankanawadi emphasized how genetic profiling, biomarker analysis, and risk stratification can help identify individuals at high risk for cardiovascular diseases even before clinical symptoms appear. This approach allows physicians to design personalized prevention strategies, including lifestyle interventions, early screening, and tailored pharmacological therapies.

The lecture provided participants with a deeper understanding of how genomics, molecular biology, and advanced diagnostics are shaping the future of medicine. The session was highly interactive, and the postgraduate students actively engaged in discussions and clarified their queries with the resource person.

The program concluded with a vote of thanks, expressing sincere gratitude to Dr. Suresh Kankanawadi for delivering an informative and thought-provoking lecture. The session was highly beneficial for the postgraduate students as it broadened their knowledge about the emerging role of personalized and precision medicine in modern clinical practice.
